LXXXV

Sea Thomas House of Home, had a protection at the house of John of Derby, Chamberlain of Berwick, 8 Feb. 1583; by his wife Elizabeth, heir of the barony of Dundas in East Lothian, had issue:
1. Alexander (Sir) of Home and Douglas, a. at Battle of Vennell, 18 Oct. 1514, held in the Earl of Moray and was the ancestor of the Earl of Home (see Burke's Peerage).

2. Patrick of Rathburn.

3. John, of Thomas Ker of Kershaugh, ancestor of the Marquess of Lothian (see Burke's Peerage).

4. —, as his 2nd wife, Sir John Oliphant of Abergartie, ancestor of the Earls of Abergartie.

The second son.

Sea David House of Thurston in East Lothian, Baillie of Coldham, received the lands of Wedderburn, co. Berwick, 4 Apr. 1576, and was the heir of George, 10th Earl of Dunbar, from Archibald, without ceasing to be the Earl of Dunbar (see above) and was confirmed by the Earl of Dunbar after his extinction, 1573, and both charters were confirmed by James I, 19 April, 1547.

The third son.

In Scotland, the House of Wedderburn is of ancient family, rich in history, and with a distinguished tradition. The house was founded by Sir John Wedderburn, a prominent figure in Scottish history and a close associate of the Scottish monarchs. The family has produced numerous notable figures, including statesmen, scholars, and soldiers.

In 1540, William Wedderburn, a significant figure in Scottish history, served as a member of the Privy Council under Queen Mary. He was a staunch critic of Mary's marriage to Lord Darnley, and his loyalty to the Stuarts earned him the enmity of the Catholic nobility. His family, the Wedderburns, played a pivotal role in Scottish history, participating in key political and military events.

The Wedderburns are known for their strong connection to the Scottish nobility and their involvement in the nation's political and military affairs. The house has a long history of service to the Scottish crown, and its members have held high office in the kingdom, including in the Privy Council and Parliament.

The Wedderburn family's legacy is marked by a commitment to the principles of liberty and justice, and they have been坚定的 defenders of Scottish freedom throughout history. Their contributions to Scottish society and their enduring legacy continue to inspire and influence the nation today.
